News release

Wimbledon weather

23 June 2006

Mostly dry and warm conditions look set to greet players and spectators at the start of Wimbledon fortnight, which begins next Monday 26 June.

During the first few days of the championship, maximum temperatures in London are forecast to be around 22 °C, with sunny spells at times, but also the chance of scattered showers. Towards the end of the first week temperatures are expected to rise, possibly reaching 28 °C by Friday. It may become more humid as well with an increasing risk of heavier showers in the south-east of England.

Planning your Wimbledon fortnight

For further information:
Met Office Press Office +44 (0)1392 886655
E-mail: pressoffice@metoffice.gov.uk

Met Office Customer Centre 0870 900 0100
If you're outside the UK +44 (0)1392 885680

© Crown copyright